Becoming Irreplaceable

Length: 60 - 90 min

When loyalty is at its highest profits rise, people are excited about their work, and positive buzz drives new prospects to your door.

However, creating loyalty in a highly competitive and digital marketplace is easier said than done.

PROGRAM DETAILS:

For the first time in recent history, the answer is NOT a new app or automation. People “want” to be loyal, but companies need to give their clients and team members a “reason” to do so.

Nobody starts a relationship hoping it’s going to end, yet great clients leave good companies, and valued team members step away for “better” opportunities...every...single...day!

How do we create a culture of connection with these valuable people when there are so many other things to do and focus on in our business? This is John's #1 requested keynote.

I’ve had the good fortune of seeing hundreds of professional speakers over 40 years, including some of the most prominent names in the industry. John has a real gift. It’s hard to find someone who is able to inspire, entertain, and challenge all at once.”

Bruce Goodman

“We brought John Israel back for a 2nd year in a row. Which is very rare. But our survey feedback was so good, and he prepared so well the first time that we decided to have him back a 2nd time. He brought fresh and new content and served at an even higher level the 2nd year around.”
